TREATMENT BENEFITS AND RISKS

We expect that the services you receive here will result in some very measurable benefits for you. The benefits of treatment often include increased self-esteem and self-control, renewed awareness and commitment to core beliefs and values, enhanced decision-making and problem-solving ability, healthier lifestyle and relationships, and a better sense of personal direction and motivation.

There are also some potential risks involved with treatment. You may experience intense feelings of sadness, anger, fear, guilt, or anxiety as you explore and discuss the reasons that brought you here. It is important to remember that these feelings are often a normal and important part of the treatment process. Also, major life decisions and changes are sometimes made as a result of treatment, including tough decisions regarding relationships, careers, and lifestyles. These decisions may cause some anxiety for you and your loved ones at the time, even though they are often a positive and legitimate outcome of treatment.

Some commonly prescribed medications can also have expected or unexpected negative side effects, although many times these can be alleviated with little difficulty. Please inform us immediately if you experience side effects from medication.

Early termination of treatment services or refusal of recommended services can carry some risks, in that you may not have received the full benefit of treatment and may not be fully prepared to make important decisions. The termination of treatment can be a difficult process and can result in feelings of loss as you take on more responsibilities. However, termination of treatment in itself can be a constructive, useful process when planned in advance and discussed thoroughly.

Only you can determine whether the treatment you are receiving is beneficial to you. Your level of motivation, your investment of time and energy, and your willingness to work hard in treatment can all influence the benefits you receive. Please make sure you fully discuss treatment benefits and risks with our staff.
